HAVE YOU CHECK LATELY

Occasionally, the Credit Union finds that members have failed to designate a joint-owner or a beneficiary of their Credit Union savings. Under Pennsylvania Law, a Credit Union account is treated like any other bank account for purposes of estate administration. If you do not designate a co-owner or beneficiary, Pennsylvania Laws requires that an estate be opened before the Credit Union can release the monies in those accounts.

You can avoid the cost and inconvenience of opening an estate by simply designating a co-owner or beneficiary to your account. This change to your account can be done by mail if you request the proper forms from the Credit Union office.
